12:31:50 PM from Sue Michul to All Participants:

So is the Supreme Court saying that it is up to librarians to prevent kids from checking out R-rated movies if the parents request this?

12:32:05 PM from terryann lawler to All Participants:

only if they want to 12:32:19 PM from terryann lawler to All Participants:

she just said it was possible

12:32:35 PM from Kristina Ronne to All Participants:

I think it is saying that it would be acceptable for a library to go by the individual parents

12:32:52 PM from Kristina Ronne to All Participants:

wishes

12:37:10 PM from Denise Zielinski to All Participants:

what happened to the audio?

12:37:18 PM from Naomi Keppler to All Participants:

I can still hear

12:38:14 PM from Ryan McGinnis to All Participants:

Restart your session quickly...I had audio issues at first, but a restart of session fixed it.

12:38:31 PM from eileen oshea to All Participants:

Thanks Ryan - excellent advice!

12:39:13 PM from eileen oshea to All Participants:

You can also try closing the Audio Broadcast window and reopen it from the Communicate menu.

Always explain that we serve the needs of the entire community & must provides materials to reflect that

12:42:25 PM from terryann lawler to All Participants:

i always thank parents who are complaining for paying attention to what their children are reading/watching

12:42:29 PM from Patricia Rodriguez to All Participants:

lost sound

12:43:19 PM from Cindy Stohs to All Participants:

I like to have a copy of the pertaining policy in hand when I speak to a patron.

12:44:31 PM from TRISTA EADEN to All Participants:

I think that is a good thing to do Terry. It helps to diffuse a parent's anger or displeasure with material they might find inappropriate.

12:46:44 PM from Kristina Ronne to All Participants:

We have had a couple where a book was moved from one section to another

12:47:17 PM from Marcie Shaffer to All Participants:

in my experience customers just want to be heard and listened to. a civil discussion can be calming.

12:47:48 PM from Kristina Ronne to All Participants:

I don't actually know if we have had any formal challenges because our administration is in another building

12:48:19 PM from Lois Crump to All Participants:

When the computers are in the same spot, adults and children are within seeing distance of each computer. How do you deal with the adult web sites?

12:48:38 PM from Laura Hughes to All Participants:

i got disconnected and lost audio

12:48:40 PM from Kristina Ronne to All Participants:

If the library wants to take on that responsibility

Chat 01/12/2012 Intellectual Freedom: Basic training for new staff and a refresher for the rest of us

12:49:10 PM from Katelyn Widener to All Participants:

just to clarify, on a national level there is no law to support libraries restricting R rated films across the board from minors even though they could not be able to buy tickets to see the same movie in the theaters?

12:49:27 PM from Mary Claire Hutchinson to All Participants:

What about pornography involving adults? Do you respond to patron complaints if there is not a policy in place?

12:49:36 PM from Amy Hauptman to All Participants:

An adult card is required in order to check out anything other than a G rated DVD.

12:49:53 PM from Kristina Ronne to All Participants:

We have a policy that basically says that if an action prevents another user from using the library comfortably it can be considered bad behavior and a patron can be asked to refrain

12:50:23 PM from Cassandra Lyons to All Participants:

Is there a distinction between "may lead to illegal behavior" and actually advocating the illegal behavior? Are both protected?

12:50:31 PM from amy shipley to All Participants:

due to the high fines on DVDs, we require parental permission for kids to check out all DVDs. We don't restrict based on the rating, just the fact that the fines are high on DVDs.

12:50:45 PM from amy shipley to All Participants:

i wonder if that's restricting free speech?

12:51:24 PM from Steve Carmody to All Participants:

I've had a couple interruptions so sorry if this has already been covered-what about sexually graphic pictures/drawings in a sexual education book on adult materials shelves in a public library? any thoughts? thanks

12:51:45 PM from Susan Umpleby to All Participants:

Our library limits checking out movies to 18 years & older. Parents can give limited video privileges to their kids for TV & documentary videos.

12:52:29 PM from Laura Hughes to All Participants:

This has been a very interesting topic but I must go. Looking forward to more future webinars.

12:53:06 PM from Mayra Rocha to All Participants:

Our policy only allows adults to check out DVDs in general your local state library association may also be a source for intellec freedom info

12:57:00 PM from Carrie Valdes to All Participants:
Based on your slide, adults have the right to access materials harmful to minors. Do they have that right in a public library where there are children present?

12:58:42 PM from Yolanda Cardenas-Parra to All Participants:
we only allow adults to check out R rated movies, is that right?

12:58:46 PM from Susan Umpleby to All Participants:
Thank you for a webinar for a great webinar. Unfortunately I have to sign off now.

12:59:53 PM from Lois Crump to All Participants:
