RDA is designed...

- ...with the user in mind.
- ...to describe all types of resources.
- ...to make library data work better with other data on the Web.

---

---

---

---

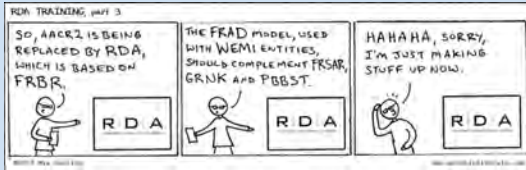

---

---

---

---

RDA is based on FRBR (Functional Requirements for Bibliographic Records).

Structure of RDA – General structure

Unlike AACR2, not organized by class of materials
Instead, arranged around user tasks to help users identify and relate resources
Each section begins with a chapter of general guidelines.
Subsequent chapters include instructions that support one of the user tasks
E.g. in Section 1:

- Chapter 1: General guidelines
- Chapter 2: FRBR task = Identify
- Chapter 3: FRBR task = Select

Linked Data/BIBFRAME

This technical site for the Bibliographic Framework Initiative (BIBFRAME.ORG) serves as the official repository for the vocabulary, tools and shared code in support of BIBFRAME. Led by the Library of Congress, this community effort represents the beginning of a transition from the MARC 21 communication format to a new RDF-based data model, embracing Linked Data practices in support of sharing and publishing metadata.

Background
The Library of Congress informational site presents a complete overview of the BIBFRAME initiative. Use this as a starting point to find important technical documents, webinars, presentations and committee work. Use the additional content from this site.

Model & Vocabulary
The BIBFRAME Model is made up of high-level classes, or entities. A related set of classes and properties make up the BIBFRAME Vocabulary. The vocabulary is now presented in three views: Model View, Category View, and List View.

Documents & Tools
Explore topics, see demonstration datasets, and use all download tools.
